To Whom It May Concern:

We recently hired general contractor Sam Boyer of Geode Home Services LLC to complete extensive renovations on an older home we purchased in Wheat Ridge, Colorado.

It was a tricky project with many facets to it — from demolishing and removing an oversized kitchen island and replacing the bamboo floor to installing a new sink and vanity in the master bathroom, adding new entryway tile, creating new light fixtures and electrical outlets, building upscale floor-to-ceiling bookshelves, repairing walls and even doing some specialized painting.

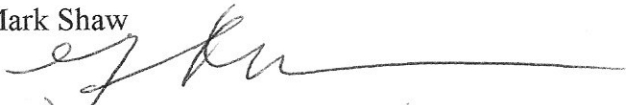

Sam did it all quickly and efficiently. He followed our detailed plan to the letter and added ideas and suggestions of his own that greatly improved the results. It was Sam's expertise in many different remodeling arenas that made the project a success. He has multiple skills: electrical, plumbing, carpentry, tile and wood floors, painting and other specialties, which meant we didn't have to wait around for subcontractors to step in and complete those elements. He also understands how to handle municipal permits and work with city inspectors in a timely manner.

The best part of working with Sam on the project was his consistent professionalism. He is a smart perfectionist who insists that the job be done right. He shows up on time, works hard and completes tasks before moving on to new ones. He also takes great care to keep all work areas clean, safe and functional — very important when the remodeling takes place in an occupied structure.

Sam was also honest and straightforward in all his billings and paperwork. He let us know if there was a way to save money or do something more efficiently, even if it meant less money for him. We would hire Sam Boyer and his company again for any job, and may do so in the future when we expand our house. He has our heartiest recommendation as a contractor.

Thanks.
